I have learned of a program that could be a wonderful fit for our company.

Employee Art Program collects artworks from the employees of a business. They then prepare, and mount the artworks to decorate our offices and home workspaces.

The focus is on artistic images, paintings and other flat artworks. Submissions are also encouraged from amateur artists and photographers. Even cell phone photos can be used. Really, anyone in the company will be able to participate.

The purpose of this program is to encourage creative exploration together with co-workers and to decorate our work spaces with photos and artworks that are personally meaningful. Personalizing both our in person and home offices might make everyone feel more connected.

An online space is available where everyone can submit images, and work with employee art program on the editing and presentation style for their artwork. The online interaction is optional and included in the program costs.

Benefits we could see from promoting a creative endeavor shared between co-workers:

- Seeing familiar day to day work problems in a new way
- Developing friendships with people you might otherwise see as your competition
- Discover hidden leaders already in the company
- Build informal networks that connect departments and knowledge bases in the company

We do this simply by encouraging people to practice or renew an interest in their art or photography. Everyone at any skill level is encouraged and assisted to participate in any way they can.

To determine if the program is a good fit for us there is a five minute fit assessment quiz on their website. I hope we can give this program serious consideration!
